UNDERGRAD RESEARCH OPPORTUNITIES AT GEORGIA TECH

Undergraduate research is a high-impact extracurricular involvement to enhance your time at Tech. The Office of Undergraduate Research Opportunities hosts a wide variety of programs for students to get engaged with research.

1. The Research Option: By completing 9 credit hours of research (academic credit or paid), taking research writing classes, and completing a thesis, you could graduate with the research option in preparation for grad/med school.

2. Vertically Integrated Projects: Are teams consisting of undergraduates, grad students, and faculty conducting interdisciplinary projects in a wide variety of fields.

3. Summer Research: There are opportunities at GT, GTRI, other universities, and national labs for funded research over the summer across the country. The NSF funds many Research Experiences for Undergraduates (REUs) for most research domains.

Summer Research

4. International Research: There are international research opportunities at GT Lorraine and other countries such as Chile, Switzerland, and Japan. These international research experiences for undergraduates cover a wide variety of fields. Some of these programs, like RISE Germany, do not require foreign language proficiency.

International Research

5. Many More: There are numerous research opportunities spanning the globe, so head to UROP's website, the Undergraduate Research Ambassadors (URA), or Tech's own undergraduate journal The Tower to learn more.
